

From Working Daughters to Working Mothers

IMMIGRANT WOMEN IN A NEW ENGLAND INDUSTRIAL COMMUNITY

Louise Lamphere

Cornell University Press

Ithaca and London

Contents

Illustrations and Tables	ix
Preface	xiii
The Field Research	1
PART I Theoretical Framework
1. From Working Daughters to Working Mothers	15
PART II Working Daughters and Economic Expansion, 1790–1940
2. Early Working Daughters: Pulling Immigrant Families into the Textile-Mill Economy	47
3. Working Daughters, Ethnic Neighborhoods, and Family Strategies	92
4. The Decline of the Textile Industry and Women's Resistance	171
PART III Working Mothers, 1940–80
5. The Transformation of the Central Falls Economy and the New Women Immigrants	221

Contents

6. Working Mothers and Family Strategies in Colombian and Portuguese Households	257
7. Women's Strategies on the Job: Informal Resistance in an Apparel Plant	289
8. Production, Reproduction, Ethnicity, and Strategies of Resistance: Conclusions	326
APPENDIXES
A. Women's Work in the Cotton Industry	341
B. Women's Work in the Silk Industry	353
C. Networks of Support for New Immigrants	357
D. Child-Care Arrangements in New Immigrant Families	365
Bibliography	371
Index	381