

E. Joseph Sharkey

Idling the Engine

Linguistic Skepticism in and around Cortázar, Kafka, and Joyce

The Catholic University of America Press
Washington, D.C.

Contents

Preface / vii

Acknowledgments / xiii

Abbreviations / xv

1. Introduction: Paradise Lost as an Allegory of Finitude / 1

The Skeptical Threat in Paradise Lost / 4

Paradise Lost in Light of Gadamer and Wittgenstein: Idling the Engine / 21

Conclusion / 40

2. Skeptical Self-Contradiction in Hopscotch: Knowing, Being, Reading, Writing / 42

The Self-Contradiction of Cortázar's "Active Spectator":

How to Know? How to Be? / 44

The Confused Hermeneutics of Hopscotch: How to Read? How to Write? / 77

Conclusion / 114

3. Kafka, Wittgenstein, and the Limits of Language / 118

Wittgensteinian Skepticism in The Castle: Inside and Outside the Language-Game at Once / 124

"On Parables": The Value of Already Knowing That the Incomprehensible Is Incomprehensible / 156

Conclusion / 189

vi Contents

4. The Skeptic and the Hermeneut in Joyce / 191

Stephen's Rejection of Finitude / 197

Bloom's Finite Existence and Hermeneutical Aesthetic, Bloomitas / 226

Conclusion: Joyce's Choices / 251

5. Conclusion: Joyce's Teacup / 254

Works Cited / 261

Index / 269