

A sound family

IDEOLOGY AND UPBRINGING IN A GERMAN VILLAGE

makes a sound State-

KARIN NORMAN

Stockholm Studies in Social Anthropology
1991

Contents

Foreword	i
Introduction	1
1. Learning to be a person: introducing concepts	8
Problems of socialization and person	9
The individual in the society	15
Childhood and pedagogics in German thinking	19
Bringing up and educating: notions about Erziehung	28
Punishing and praising	32
Order and independence	34
The necessity to learn: notions about lernen	40
2. The place and people of Linden: a setting	44
Land and work: aspects of class and belonging	48
Ways of associating	55
Municipality and local politics	58
History, the past, and problems of identity	61
3. Separating and binding: the child at home	73
Household composition and family ties	74
Mothers, Omas , and others	88
Small children and the problem of dependence	94

4. To be in a group: ideology and practice of kindergarten	104
A day in kindergarten	108
The newcomer	114
Mastering reality and being creative	119
Putting things in order: aufräumen	130
The performance of praise and punishment	133
5. Coping with pedagogics: the early school years	143
First grade, first day	145
The German school and the school in Linden	150
Sarcasm and praise: constructing Ordnung in school	152
Asking and answering questions	162
Obstacles to learning and the problem of blame	165
Ordnung and the problem of difference	169
6. Encompassing the individual: claims of the church	176
Believing and going to church in Linden	178
Debating the moral body: a seminar on sexuality	184
Gemeinschaft and conformity among youth	189
Dealing with modernity	193
Learning to be a Christian	199
7. Concluding remarks	209
Notes	218
References	236
Index	247