
More Than a Living
Fishing and the Social Order
on a Polynesian Atoll

Michael D. Lieber

Westview Press
BOULDER • SAN FRANCISCO • OXFORD

Contents

List of Illustrations	ix
Foreword, Ward H. Goodenough	xi
Acknowledgments	xix

PART ONE Researching Traditional Fishing

1. Getting It Done	3
Why Fishing? 12
Framework of the Research, 19
Message, Meaning, Context, and Culture, 27
Cultural Premises: Propositions That Organize Contexts, 33
Conduct of the Research, 35
The Scope of the Research, 39
Notes, 41

PART TWO Traditional Fishing Activities

2 Traditional Fishing Activities	45
3 Netting	57
4 Pole and Line Fishing	77
5 Weirs	87
6 Collecting	91
7 Trapping	93
8 Angling	99
Lagoon Angling, 100
Deep Sea Angling, 105
9 The Ordering of Constraints on Fishing Activity	113
Notes, 126

PART THREEChanging Contexts and the Contexts of Change

10	Coping with a Changing Environment	131
	Persons, Groups, and the Location of Authority, 137
	Recreating the Social Order, 141
	Onotoa, Kapingamarangi, and the Organization of Change, 154
	Notes, 163
11	The Americans: Institutionalizing Differentiation and Uncertainty	165
	The Process of Atomization, 166
	Search for Solutions: Looking Outward, Looking Inward, 180
	Notes, 186

PART FOURHow It Is, How It Was, How It Might Be

12	Stable Premises in a Changing World	189
	Notes, 207
	Epilogue	209
	Appendix 1: List of Catch Techniques	213
	Appendix 2: Native Fishes of Kapingamarangi Atoll	219
	References	231