

Colombia Inside the Labyrinth

Jenny Pearce

To my parents, Joan and Neville Pearce

Contents

I. Introduction: Bolívar's Knot	I
PART ONE: The Birth of the Political Order	II
I.1 Historical Threads	13
'... a kind of archipelago'
Colonial legacy
Independence but no nation
Party warfare
The agricultural frontier
'Regeneration or catastrophe'
'A gust of death had passed over the entire country'
I.2 The Oligarchic Republic	27
Coffee and Antioquia
Coffee and the nation state
The heroic years: urban labour (1919-29)
'Real' country and 'political' country
The 'Revolution on the March' (1934-8)
Peasant struggles
Retreat and 'reconquest' (1938-45)
Towards La Violencia
The roots of barbarism
I.3 La Violencia (1948-65)	49
The Bogotazo and its aftermath
La Violencia (1949-53)
Blood and accumulation
Political solution: military arbitration (1953-7)
La Violencia (1958-65)
The bipartisan state
PART TWO: The Crisis of the Political Order (1966-86)	67
2.1 Colombia's Two Economies	69
The people's economy
The World Bank's economy
The economic sectors
Industry: the golden triangle
Agriculture: changing landscapes
'Colombia is coffee or it is nothing'
Energy: a national debate

	The underground economy
	The cocaine economy
	The failure to reform
2.2	The Popular Response	119
	The peasant movement
	Militancy and mobilisation (1970-4)
	Division and defeat (1974-81)
	Rebuilding ANUC-Sincelejo
	The indigenous movement
	The CRIC: early history
	The CRIC: politics and organisation
	Towards a national Indian organisation
	Trade unions
	The labour market and unionisation
	Trade unions and political parties
	Strikes and the growth of the independent unions
	Towards unity
	Civic movements
	The 1970s: the small towns erupt
	The 1980s: protest grows
	Building national coordination
	Colombia's social movements: problems and perspectives
2.3	The Political Response	165
	Guerrilla struggles: the first generation (1964 to mid-1970s)
	The FARC and armed colonisation
	The ELN
	The EPL
	Guerrilla struggles: the second generation (1974-82)
	The M-19
	Guerrillas and coca
	The armed struggle revitalised
	The armed truce (1982-5)
2.4	The State's Response	183
	The crisis of the two-party system
	Elite politics
	The new clientelism
	The decline of the two-party system
	Cocaine politics

Political responses
The church and social change
The armed forces and political autonomy
Democracy without the people
PART THREE: Counter-Offensive	209
3.1 Counter-Offensive	211
The limits of reform
The Barco plan
Reform in the countryside
Reform in the cities
Reconciling people and the state: the popular election of mayors
Political reform: the painful path
'Official' and 'unofficial' repression
Magdalena Medio and the organised right
Class war in Urabá
Political violence and social conflict
The Government versus the paramilitary right
Cocaine wars
Legitimacy and authority: the counter-offensive stalls
3.2 Political Options	275
The popular movement
Towards a political front
The guerrilla movements
Peace or war?
Colombia's political time-bomb
Appendix	288
Bibliography	294
Acronyms	303
Index	307