

Traders, planters, and slaves

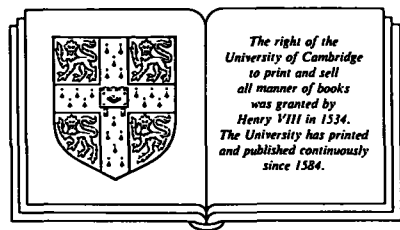

Market behavior in early

English America

DAVID W. GALENSON

Department of Economics

University of Chicago

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge

London New York New Rochelle

Melbourne Sydney

Contents

List of tables	page ix
Preface	xi
1 The Atlantic slave trade and the early development of the English West Indies	1
The growth of the early English West Indies	2
Consequences of the sugar revolution	7
The slave trade and the role of the Royal African Company	13
The Royal African Company and the organization of the slave trade	21
2 Shipping and mortality	29
The size of slave cargoes	29
The seasonality of the slave trade	33
Mortality in the Middle Passage	37
3 Slave prices in the Barbados market, 1673–1723	53
The significance of slave prices	53
Estimation of slave prices	53
The structure of slave prices by age and sex	61
Trends in Barbados slave prices, 1673–1723	64
4 On the order of purchases by characteristics at slave sales	71
Characteristics of slave sales in Barbados	72
The behavior of prices over the course of slave sales	73
The format of Royal African Company slave sales	81
Explaining the order of purchases in the slave sales	85
	vii

Contents

5 The demographic composition of the slave trade: an economic investigation	93
Variation in the age composition of the slave trade	93
The age composition of the slave trade: an economic analysis	97
Females in internal African slave markets and the Atlantic slave trade: a hypothesis	105
The selection of cargoes and the demographic composition of the slave trade	110
6 Estimating geographic persistence from market observations: population turnover among estate owners and managers in Barbados and Jamaica, 1673–1725	115
The significance of mobility and the use of persistence studies	115
Market observations and the measurement of persistence	116
The Royal African Company invoice accounts and the market for slaves in Barbados and Jamaica	118
Persistence in Barbados and Jamaica	121
Trends in persistence over time	125
Persistence and wealth	132
Geographic persistence in Barbados and Jamaica: comparative perspective and interpretation	135
Population turnover and the development of a plantation economy in the English West Indies	137
7 The economic structure of the early Atlantic slave trade: the challenge of Adam Smith's analysis	143
The conduct of the early Atlantic slave trade	143
Adam Smith's analysis and the causes of the failure of the Royal African Company	145
The applicability of economic theory to history	150
The Atlantic slave trade and early English America	153
Appendixes
A The Royal African Company's homeward bound invoice account books	157
B Data used in the analysis of passage mortality, 1720–5	163
C Measuring persistence rates and the problem of common names	167
Notes	173
Selected bibliography	217
Index	225