

EPIDEMICS AND GENOCIDE
IN EASTERN EUROPE
1890–1945

Paul Julian Weindling

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

CONTENTS

List of Illustrations	viii
List of Maps	x
List of Tables	x
Acknowledgements	xi
Note on Names of Places and Persons	xiv
Foreword	xv

I. MICROBES AND MIGRANTS

1. Disease as Metamorphosis	3
2. Eradicating Parasites	19
3. Cleansing Bodies, Defending Borders	49
4. The First World War and Combating Lice	73

II. CONTAINMENT

5. Defending German Health: Technical Solutions	111
6. The Sanitary Iron Curtain: The Relief of Polish and Russian Typhus	139
7. German–Soviet Medical Collaboration	183
8. The Demise of Internationalism	209

III. ERADICATION

9. From Geo-medicine to Genocide	225
10. Delousing and the Holocaust	271
11. 'Victory with Vaccines': Human Guinea-pigs and Louse-feeders	322
12. From Medical Research to Biological Warfare	373
13. Clinical Trials on Trial	393

APPENDICES

I. Typhus Statistics in Germany, Poland, Russia, and the Ukraine	428
II. Typhus Vaccines and Sera, 1876–1944	435

Select Bibliography	437
Index	451