

Romantics and Modernists in British Cinema

John Orr

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
List of figures	ix
Introduction: romantics versus modernists?	1
1. 1929: romantics and modernists on the cusp of sound	5
The documentary legacy: Drifters	7
The forging of the fugitive film: A Cottage on Dartmoor	11
Transgressing triangles: Piccadilly and The Manxman	14
Blackmail and transition	18
Constructive and deconstructive: Number Seventeen	23
2. The running man: Hitchcock's fugitives and The Bourne Ultimatum	25
Jason's Waterloo: Hitchcock, Greengrass and deepest fears	25
The fugitive kind: pre-war, wartime, post-war	28
British Hitchcock: from romance thriller to post-romantic fable	32
The poetics of treachery: Dickinson and Cavalcanti	34
The triumph of the short film: Bon Voyage and Aventure malgache	37
Post-romantic fugitives: Stage Fright and Frenzy	40
Epilogue: the Frenzy murders	42
3. Running man 2: Carol Reed and his contemporaries	44
Fable versus romance: The Third Man and They Made Me a Fugitive	54
Reed and subterfuge: The Man Between and Our Man in Havana	57
Reed's successors	62
4. David Lean: the troubled romantic and the end of empire	64
Forgotten Lean: the Ann Todd trilogy	64
Madeleine : the perverse unveiled	70

	The Sound Barrier : the faltering sublime and the end of empire	77
	Enthusiast or fanatic? The paradox of Lean's 'Lawrence'	79
5.	The trauma film from romantic to modern: A Matter of Life and Death to Don't Look Now	86
	Prelude: Thorold Dickinson and Anton Walbrook	88
	Juxtaposition: A Matter of Life and Death and Dead of Night	89
	Powellian trauma: Black Narcissus , The Small Back Room , Peeping Tom	94
	Female 'madness' and modernism: The Innocents and Repulsion	101
	The trauma double bill: Don't Look Now and The Wicker Man	108
	The neo-romantic turn and death in Venice: Don't Look Now	110
	Romantic symbol and modernist edit	112
6.	Joseph Losey and Michelangelo Antonioni: the expatriate eye and the parallax view	115
	Losey and Pinter: the modernist moment in The Servant and Accident	119
	Coda: Providence as Resnais's riposte to Losey	128
	Antonioni's parallax view: Blow-Up and The Passenger	129
	What's in a title? The Passenger or Profession: Reporter	135
	Coda: the native eye in Radio On	139
7.	Expatriate eye 2: Stanley Kubrick and Jerzy Skolimowski	141
	Freedom and fate: Barry Lyndon	148
	Skolimowski and running water: or, Deep End and Cul-de-Sac	152
	Rise and fall: The Shout , Moonlighting , Success is the Best Revenge	156
	Bringing it all back home: Moonlighting and Success is the Best Revenge	159
8.	Terence Davies and Bill Douglas: the poetics of memory	164
	Mimetic modernism and family mysteries: the Douglas trilogy	167
	Davies: the romantic imagist and the poetry of memory	171
	Floating through space and time: The Long Day Closes	173
	The past as present: The House of Mirth and The Wings of the Dove	177
9.	Conclusion: into the new century	180
	Select bibliography	185
	Index	189