

The price of war

URBANIZATION IN VIETNAM 1954–85

Nigel Thrift

Saint David's University College, University of Wales

and

Dean Forbes

Australian National University

London

ALLEN AND UNWIN

Boston

Sydney

Contents

Preface and acknowledgements	page ix
List of tables	xiii
1 Introduction	1
Notes	5
2 The problems of characterizing socialist developing countries	6
Empirical characteristics	6
Theoretical characterization	13
Notes	25
3 The problems of characterizing urbanization in socialist developing countries	28
The empirical characteristics of urbanization	28
Theoretical characterization of urbanization	34
Notes	40
4 Vietnam	43
History	46
Demography	51
Economy	53
Administrative structure	59
Notes	66
5 The Democratic Republic of Vietnam, 1954–76: building a determinant state	68
Initial conditions and ideological predispositions	69
Advantages and disadvantages	74
Towards a centrally planned economy	76
Contradictions in the state's handling of the economy	81
Penetrating civil society	82
External relations	84
Notes	85

6	Urbanization in the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, 1954 to 1975/6	87
	Slow urban growth, 1954-65	91
	Zero urban growth, 1965-73	96
	Re-adjustment and slow urban growth, 1973 to 1975-6	97
	Notes	97
7	The Socialist Republic of Vietnam, 1976-85: rebuilding a determinant state	98
	Ideology and external relations in crisis	99
	The state in crisis	101
	The economy in crisis	104
	Civil society in crisis	117
	Notes	119
8	Urbanization in the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, 1976-85	122
	Slow urban growth in the North, 1975-6 to 1985	126
	De-urbanization in the South, 1975-6 to 1980	129
	Slow urban growth in the South, 1980-5	140
	Notes	140
9	A tale of two cities: the experiences of Hanoi and Saigon (Ho Chi Minh City) under socialist rule	142
	Hanoi, 1945-85	142
	Ho Chi Minh City, 1975-85	152
	Notes	162
10	Conclusions	164
	Notes	170
	Bibliography	171
	Index	185