

Recounting Migration
Political Narratives of Congolese
Young People in Uganda

CHRISTINA R. CLARK-KAZAK

McGill-Queen's University Press
Montreal & Kingston • London • Ithaca

Contents

- Illustrations x
- Glossary of Foreign Language Terms xi
- Abbreviations xiii
- Preface xv
- Acknowledgments xix
- 1 Politicizing Approaches to Refugee Young People 3
- 2 Maps and Methods: Migration Narratives in Context 27
- 3 Innocente's Story: The Daily Politics of Belonging 45
- 4 James's Story: "For Us Nande, a Tree Is Planted for Our Grandfather" – Roots and Routes along the Ugandan-Congolese Border 57
- 5 Rose's Story: The Politics of Administrative Categorization: Vulnerability, Agency, and Power Relations 69
- 6 Augustin's Story: "I Was Supposed to Be a Prince" – Discourses on Leadership and Realities of Decision-Making Opportunities 78
- 7 Lucie's Story: Riches to Rags – Negotiating Power Reversals in Refugee Contexts 91
- 8 Amani's Story: Of Marriageable Age – Cross-Border Extended Family Politics 101
- 9 Bondeko's Story: Social Networks and "Passive" Resistance 113

- 10 Jacob's Story: Respect and Respectability in Post-Migration
Intergenerational and Intragenerational Relationships 124
- 11 Paul's Story: Morphologie douteuse and the Musicality of Body Politics 137
- 12 Marie's Story: Diploma for life? Education and Exclusion in Migration Discourse and Practice 148
- Conclusion: The Politics of Age and Generation
in Migration Contexts 159
- Appendix: Research Subject Profiles 165
- Notes 195
- Bibliography 199
- Index 221