
Ephraim George Squier

and the Development of American Anthropology

Terry A. Barnhart

A large, stylized handwritten signature in black ink, reading "E. G. Squier". The signature is written in a cursive style with a long, sweeping underline.

University of Nebraska Press

Lincoln and London

CONTENTS

List of Illustrations	ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Series Editors' Introduction	xv
Prologue: Ephraim George Squier and the History of American Anthropology	I
1. Literary Ambitions: The Genesis of an Anthropologist	13
2. In Search of the Mound Builders: The Squier- Davis Association	30
3. Archaeology and the Smithsonian Institution: Editing and Publishing the Squier-Davis Manuscript	51
4. Interpreting the Mound Builders: The Archaeology of Squier and Davis	70
5. Revisiting the Mounds: The Iroquois and the Archaeology of Western New York	102
6. The Burden of Proof: American Indian Traditions and the Walam Olum	118
7. Idols and Indians: The Archaeology and Ethnology of Nicaragua	150
8. The Mind of Man: The Serpent Symbol and the Reciprocal Principles of Nature	187
9. Nahua Nations and Migrations: The Archaeology and Ethnology of Honduras and San Salvador	214
10. Ancient Peru: An Indigenous Civilization	244
11. The Science of Men and Nations: Ephraim George Squier and the American School of Ethnology	281
Epilogue: Insanity and the "Eclipse of Genius"	317
A Note on Archival Sources	333
Notes	339
Bibliography: The Anthropological Writings of Ephraim George Squier	407
Index	415