

DOROTHEA E. SCHULZ

PERPETUATING THE POLITICS OF PRAISE

JELI SINGERS, RADIOS, AND POLITICAL MEDIATION
IN MALI

RÜDIGER KÖPPE VERLAG KÖLN

2001

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PREFACE	9
INTRODUCTION	17
1. Theoretical orientations	15
1.1. A public domain established by broadcast media	22
1.2. New political institutions and sources of legitimacy	24
1.3. A multicultural nation state	31
2. Organization of the book	34
CHAPTER I
Between articulation and alteration: the place of jeliw in nineteenth century society	36
1. The setting	36
2. Local power relations and the external state	38
3. Relations between jeliw and their patrons: an alliance of common interests	44
4. Jeliw's role in the public celebration of power	54
4.1. Jeliw's public speech performances	55
4.2. Visions of the ambiguous nature of political rule	56
4.3. The effects and limitations of the jeli praise performances	65
CHAPTER II
The changing conditions of jeli praise under colonial rule	73
1. The abolition of slavery and the impoverishment of powerful patrons	73
2. Literacy as a source of political legitimacy	76
3. The transformation of local economies in the circle of Kita	79
4. The changing context of patronage	81
5. The alteration of patron-client relations	84
6. Jeli speakers as legitimators in a changing institutional context	87
CHAPTER III
"You have broken our hope:" Farmers' disenchantment with politics, 1960-1996	90
1. Rural perceptions of the emerging nation state, 1960-1968	91
1.1. The independence movement and the rise of new political elites	91
1.2. The social basis and ideological orientation of Modibo Keita's rule	95
1.3. The reshaping of farmer economies in the circle of Kita	97

1.4. Attempts by the party to gain a stronghold in the countryside	100
1.5. Jeliw as brokers between local and national politics?	106
2. Rural reconsiderations of the central state under Moussa Traoré, 1968–1991	109
3. Farmers' reflections on national politics since 1992	116

CHAPTER IV

Jeliya today: jeli roles in contemporary Malian society, and their relations to current “patrons”

1. The diversification of jeli occupations	126
2. Jeli tasks in villages and their relations to patrons	131
2.1. Spokespeople and family historians	131
2.2. Musicians and entertainers	134
2.3. Praise speakers at informal encounters	138
2.4. Counselor and eyewitness in intimate settings	139
2.5. Managers of public opinion	139
3. The “terms of trade” of jeli–patron relations in rural areas	143
4. Jeli activities and their relations to “patrons” in town	151
4.1. Spokespeople and counselors	152
4.2. Musicians and praise singers	153
5. The value of praise	156
6. The nostalgia of a lost friendship	159

CHAPTER V

Praise and its discontents: jeliw and national politics, 1960–1991

1. The politics of culture under Modibo Keita, 1960–1968	166
1.1. Media policies under the US-RDA	167
1.2. Broadcast audiences as new publics	170
1.3. The creation of “national” culture on broadcast media and in performance groups	172
1.4. The creation of a common past	177
1.5. Broadcasting and the emergence of a nationalist discourse	178
1.6. Jeliw and the politics of praise: the construction of political legitimacy	179
1.7. Jeliw as clients and brokers of the ruling party	183
1.8. Broadcast consumption and the controversial production of meaning	184
1.9. Farmers' view of jeliw's affiliations with the political elites	186
1.10. Broadcast music as a medium of criticism	187
2. The politics of culture under Moussa Traoré, 1968–1991	190
2.1. An expanding domain of public communication	190
2.2. The commercialization of art	192
2.3. An emerging market of praise	195

- 2.4. Praise and the persisting rhetoric of obligation 198
- 2.5. The transformation of jeli songs into an entertainment genre 203

CHAPTER VI

Broadcast media and the commercialization of praise performances, 1991–1996 208

- 1. State politics of culture since 1991: the privatization of sponsorship 208
- 2. Jeli singers and national politics since 1991: from praise to silence 212
- 3. The market value of broadcast praise 220

CHAPTER VII

The politics of culture seen through the prism of the local 226

- 1. Southern jeli singers as the winners in the broadcast music market 228
- 2. Music in the countryside 232
- 3. Broadcast media and popular music 237
- 4. Praise under the cover of moralizing:
the rise of new performance genres 240
- 5. Jeli pop stars: the path to fame 243
- 6. Broadcast music as a medium of identity construction 248

CONCLUSION 254

APPENDIX

Bamana versions of praise songs 263

- 1. Tata Bambo Kouyaté: Bambugunci (chapter five) 263
- 2. Ami Diarra: Mansake (chapter five) 264
- 3. Mory Jeli Diabaté: ATT Touré (chapter six) 267

BIBLIOGRAPHY 270