

Power and beliefs in South Africa

Economic potency structures in South Africa and their interaction with patterns of conviction in the light of a Christian ethic

Klaus Nürnberger

University of South Africa
Pretoria

Table of contents

Abstract	x
Acknowledgements	xi
Acknowledgement of copyright	xii
Introduction	xiii
Chapter 1: The aim and method of this study	1
1.1 The aim defined	1
1.2 The problem analysed	2
1.2.1 Economic power structures	2
1.2.2 Patterns of conviction	4
1.2.3 The interaction between structures and convictions	5
1.2.4 Ethical evaluation	6
1.3 Methodological considerations	8
1.3.1 South Africa treated as a microcosm	8
1.3.2 A systems-analytical approach	9
1.3.3 Sources	10
1.3.4 The emphasis on the structural dimension	11
1.3.5 Level of sophistication	11
1.4 Summary	12
PART 1: ECONOMIC POWER STRUCTURES IN SOUTH AFRICA	13
Chapter 2: Space-potency relations	15
2.1 The aim of this chapter	15

2.2	The centre-periphery phenomenon described	15
2.3	The South African case	22
2.3.1	The overall centre-periphery structure	22
2.3.2	Areas reserved for Blacks	24
2.3.3	The urban centres	29
2.3.4	Decentralisation	34
2.4	Summary	36
Chapter 3: Population-potency relations		38
3.1	The aim of this chapter	38
3.2	The population-potency model explained	39
3.2.1	Potency distribution in the population	39
3.2.2	The time factor added	41
3.2.3	Irregularities	44
3.3	The population-potency model applied to South Africa	47
3.3.1	The three-dimensional model applied	47
3.3.2	Irregularities in the basic model	55
3.4	Galtung's dependency model (modified)	62
3.5	Galtung's (modified) dependency model applied to South Africa	66
3.5.1	South Africa as a 'commonwealth' or 'constellation of states'	66
3.5.2	South Africa as a 'unitary state'	69
3.5.3	South Africa: the real position	73
3.6	The location of identifiable groups within the system	74
3.7	Summary	77
Chapter 4: Need-potency relations		79
4.1	The aim of this chapter	79
4.2	The need-potency model explained	80
4.3	The South African situation	86
4.4	Summary	94
Chapter 5: Causes of economic potency discrepancies		96
5.1	The aim of this chapter	96
5.2	A model of causation	97
5.3	Asymmetrical market interaction	102
5.3.1	The basic model explained	102
5.3.2	Galtung's dependency model revisited	110
5.3.3	A further note on decentralisation	114
5.4	Potency discrepancies in relation to technological advance	115

5.4.1	Structural mechanisms in general	115
5.4.2	South African peculiarities	120
5.4.3	The overall capacity of the economy	127
5.5	Volitional factors	127
5.6	Summary	132
PART II: PATTERNS OF COLLECTIVE CONSCIOUSNESS AND THEIR RELATION TO SOCIETAL STRUCTURES IN SOUTH AFRICA		135
Chapter 6: The relation between societal structures and convictions — a theoretical model		137
6.1	The aim of this chapter	137
6.2	Basic convictions	138
6.2.1	Components of convictions	138
6.2.2	Types of conviction	141
6.3	Mental predispositions	142
6.4	Vital interests	143
6.5	The interaction between normative system and vital interests	144
6.6	Power, awareness and time	148
6.7	Three decisive areas of conflict and interaction	149
6.8	Summary	151
Chapter 7: Structure-induced mental predispositions		153
7.1	The aim of this chapter	153
7.2	The relation between colonizers and colonised	154
7.2.1	The Western dynamic	154
7.2.2	The reaction of the South	156
7.2.3	The crisis in the West	164
7.3	The South African example	167
7.3.1	The Whites	167
7.3.2	The underdog population groups	179
7.4	Summary	187
Chapter 8: Convictions		189
8.1	The aim of this chapter	189
8.2	Main convictions in South Africa	190
8.2.1	A-type	190
8.2.2	B-type	193
8.2.3	C-type	194
8.2.4	D-type: vital interests	195

8.3	Combinations and syncretisms	196
8.3.1	Combinations of convictions within types	196
8.3.2	Combinations of convictions between types	197
8.4	Correlations between convictions and structural positions	199
8.4.1	The independence of convictions from structural positions and vice versa ...	199
8.4.2	The interaction between convictions and structural locations	201
	A-type	203
	B-type	204
	C-type	207
8.5	Summary	213
Chapter 9: The interaction between convictions and interests		215
9.1	The aim of this chapter	215
9.2	Vital interests are justified in terms of convictions	217
9.2.1	Justification in terms of religious convictions	218
9.2.1.1	Manipulation of the system of meaning	218
9.2.1.2	Acceptable presentation of the pursuit of interests	222
9.2.1.3	Declaration of autonomy	223
9.2.2	Justification in terms of cultural identity	224
9.2.3	Justification in terms of the distribution of economic potential	234
9.3	Vital interests influence perceptions	241
9.4	Convictions determine and control interests	257
9.4.1	A-type convictions	257
9.4.2	B-type convictions	258
9.4.3	C-type convictions	259
9.4.4	D-type convictions	259
9.5	Summary	260
PART III: OUR FINDINGS IN THE LIGHT OF A THEOLOGICAL ETHIC		263
Chapter 10: A theological-ethical critique in outline		265
10.1	The aim of this chapter	265
10.2	A theological-ethical critique of economic power structures	270
10.3	A theological-ethical critique of convictions	276
10.4	A theological-ethical critique of the interaction between structures and convictions	280
10.5	Summary	285

Chapter 11: The positive contribution of a theological ethic in outline	287
11.1 The aim of this chapter	287
11.2 The missionary dynamic of the Word of God leads to syncretisms	289
11.3 The ecumenical dynamic of the Word leads to wholesome confrontations	292
11.4 The effects of ecumenical encounter are subversive	296
11.5 Three Biblical paradigms on the use of structural power	301
11.6 Application in outline	306
11.7 Summary	318
Selected Bibliography	320