
Communication Development During Infancy

Lauren B. Adamson

Georgia State University

WestviewPress

A Division of HarperCollinsPublishers

CONTENTS

Preface xi

1 The Communicating Infant: An Historical Introduction 1

The Confused Infant 2

The Competent Infant 3

Methodological Contributions 4

Heuristic Theories 5

Piaget's Sensorimotor Infant 6

Expanding the Piagetian Sphere 8

The Communicating Infant 10

The Empirical Study of Early Communication Development 13

About This Book 13

2 Theoretical Foundations for the Study of Communication Development 15

Definitions of Development 16

Development as a Predictable Sequence 16

Development as a Systematic Pattern of Change 19

Images of Communication 21

Communication as Communion 22

Communication as Transmission 25

Communication as Education 28

A Schematic View of Early Communication Development 31

Four Phases of Early Communication Development 32

Themes and Variations 35

3	A Scientific Stance toward Infants	38
	Adopting a Scientific Stance	38
	Ways of Observing	42
	Naturalistic Observation	43
	Systematic Observation	44
	Experimental Manipulation	46
	The Interplay between Observation and Experimentation	48
4	Shared Attentiveness	52
	Newborns as Expressive Communicators	53
	Newborns' Expressions within the Matrix of States	54
	Adults' Contributions to Newborns' Expressions	54
	Expressions of Distress	56
	Expressions of Availability	63
	Summary: The Newborn as an Expressive Communicator	65
	Newborns as Receptive Communicators	65
	Social Preadaptation	66
	Infant-modified Adult Expressions	69
	Preference for Familiar Social Events	71
	Amodal Perceptual Experiences	74
	Summary: The Newborn as a Receptive Communicator	77
	The Communicative Channel between Newborns and Others	77
	Establishing the Communicative Channel	78
	Complementary Contributions to Communicative Contact	79
	Summary: The Communicative Channel	82
	Theme and Variation: Attention and Prematurity	82
	The Priority of Biology	83
	Preparation Past and Future	85
5	Interpersonal Engagement	86
	Changes in Infants' Communicative Competence	87
	Infants' New Communicative Expressions	88
	Infants' Emerging Receptive Competence	92
	Caregivers as Communicative Partners	100
	The Flowering of Infant-Modified Acts	101
	Explaining Adult Modifications	104
	Summary: Infant-Modified Communicative Acts	105

Within Episodes of Interpersonal Engagement	105
Infants' Attention Modulation	105
Reciprocity and Synchrony	108
Summary: Studies of Interpersonal Engagement	116
Theme and Variation: Affect and Maternal Depression	116
The Sharing of Affect	117
Turning Outward toward Objects	119
6 Joint Object Involvement	121
Infants' Object-focused Messages	123
Coordinating Attention between People and Objects	125
Coordinating Affective Expressions and Object Involvement	127
From Acts on Objects to Gestures about Objects	132
Summary: Developing Ways to Communicate about Objects	142
Adults' Contributions to Joint Object Involvement	143
Aspects of Adults' Assistance	143
A Broader View of Adults' Contributions	147
Summary: Supporting Shared Interest in Objects	149
Structuring Object-focused Communication	149
Managing Communication about Objects	150
Explaining the Onset of Joint Object Involvement	153
Summary: Arranging Object-focused Communication	156
Theme and Variation: Object Interest and Developmental Disorders	157
The Centrality of Infants' Interests	157
A Source for the Communicative Code	159
7 The Emergence of the Symbolic Code	161
Infants' Approach to Language	162
Toward the Production of Words	162
Toward the Comprehension of Words	174
Alternative Views	179
Adults' Presentation of the Code	184
Adults' Speech to Infants	185
The Effect of Adults' Adjustments	186
Symbolic Communication as a Collective Activity	190
Continuities with Presymbolic Communication	190
Patterns for Dialogues	191

Theme and Variation: Symbolic Codes and Deafness	195
Communication and Conventions	195
Toward Community and Conversations	199

References 201

Index 233