

Sounding Modernism

Rhythm and Sonic Mediation in Modern Literature and Film

Edited by Julian Murphet,
Helen Groth and Penelope Hone

EDINBURGH
University Press

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
1. Introduction: Sounding Modernism 1890–1950	1
Part One: Writing Modern Sound
2. On Not Listening to Modernism Julian Murphet	19
3. Advocating Auricularisation: Virginia Woolf's 'In The Orchard' Tom Vandevelde	35
Part Two: Mediated Voices
4. Bottled Bands: Automatic Music and American Media Publics Lisa Gitelman	55
5. How to Listen to Joyce: Gramophones, Voice and the Limits of Mediation Helen Groth	63
6. Sounding Region, Writing Accent: A. G. Street and the BBC Debra Rae Cohen	77
7. Partial to Opera: Sounding Willa Cather's Empty Rooms John Plotz	94
8. Elliptical Sound: Audibility and the Space of Reading Julie Beth Napolin	109

Part Three: Difficult Voices

9. Harsh Sounds: George Gissing's Penetrating Literary Voice 133
Penelope Hone
10. Body and Soul: Modernism, Metaphysics, Rhyme 149
Sean Pryor
11. Listening to the Late Cantos 164
Kristin Grogan

Part Four: Modern Rhythm: Writing, Sound, Cinema

12. The Rhythms of Character in Katherine Mansfield's 'Miss Brill' 181
Helen Rydstrand
13. The Rhythm of the Rails: Sound and Locomotion 193
Laura Marcus
14. Two-step, Nerve-tap, Tanglefoot: Tapdance Typologies in Cinema 211
Steven Connor
- Notes on Contributors 228
- Bibliography 231
- Index 250