

PETER R. H. SLEE

Learning and a liberal education

THE STUDY OF
MODERN HISTORY
IN THE UNIVERSITIES OF
OXFORD, CAMBRIDGE
AND MANCHESTER,
1800-1914

Manchester University Press

CONTENTS

Preface	vii
Acknowledgements	ix
Introduction	1
PART 'ORDER, UNITY AND GUIDANCE'
ONE THE EXPANDING CURRICULUM, 1800–67
chapter 1 'An elevated tone and a flexible habit of mind'; the idea of a liberal education, 1800–50	8
2 'No theory to develop' history and the curriculum	20
3 'Such facts . . . as admit of no reasonable doubt' Cambridge, 1848–67	23
4 'A thorough knowledge of books' Oxford, 1848–67	39
PART 'A STRONG AND INDEPENDENT TWO POSITION' HONOURS SCHOOLS OF HISTORY, 1867–95
5 'Everything depends upon method' the History Tripos at Cambridge, 1867–95	56
6 'A class examination of high character' the Oxford School of Modern History, 1867–95	86
PART A LIBERAL EDUCATION THREE OR A TRAINING IN RESEARCH?
7 'An endeavour to train men capable of adding to knowledge' Bury, Firth and Tout – the 'new school'	122
8 'Freedom, a sine qua non for success'	153
Bibliography	165
Index	177