

Structural Change and International Migration in East Asia

Adjusting to Labour Scarcity

PREMA-CHANDRA ATHUKORALA and CHRIS MANNING

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Tables and Figures	viii
Preface	xii
Acknowledgments	xiv
Abbreviations	xvi
1 International Labour Migration: A Third Dimension of East Asian Growth	1
2 International Labour Migration and Structural Adjustment: An Analytical Framework	11
A 'snap-shot' view of the Lewis model	12
Some qualifications	15
The open-economy Lewis model	16
The turning point and after	18
3 Japan: A Reluctant Host	27
Starting points	28
Structural change and labour-market response	30
Post-war recovery: rapid growth without migrant workers	30
Industrial maturity and labour-market tightening	37
The entry of migrant workers	42
Profiles of foreign workers	44
Recession and migrant workers	49
Policies	50
Conclusions	52
4 South Korea and Taiwan: Foreign Workers as a Last Resort	57
Starting points	58
Structural change	60

Labour-market change and adjustment	64
Unemployment and under-employment	70
Wages and productivity	72
Labour shortages and foreign workers	79
Coping with labour shortages	89
Education and skill upgrading	92
Investing abroad	96
Structural adjustment and policies towards foreign workers	97
South Korea: financial crisis and labour-market adjustment	101
Conclusions	102
5 Hong Kong and Singapore: City-States Shaped by Migrants	112
Starting points	114
Export-led industrialisation and the Lewisian turning point	117
Migrant flows	122
Foreign workers and structural change	129
Labour supply	130
Employment and industrial structure	132
Response to tightening labour markets	135
Policy	140
Conclusions	145
6 Malaysia and Thailand: Maintaining Competitiveness through Labour Migration	149
Starting points	151
Malaysia: from a labour-scarce economy to a labour-surplus economy	151
Thailand: chronic labour surplus	154
Economic development patterns	156
Foreign capital inflows	159
Labour-market transformation	160
Employment	160
Growth in labour supply	165
Wages and unemployment	167
Migrant workers	175
Structural change, skill shortages, and immigration	179

Shortages of skilled labour	183
Investment abroad	186
Policies towards migrant workers	188
The impact of the financial crisis	196
Conclusions	199
7 Conclusion	210
The context	211
Migrant workers	214
Policies and prospects	216
Appendix A: International labour migration and the real exchange rate	221
Appendix B: Thailand and Malaysia, indices of real output per worker, employment, real average wages, and unit labour costs, 1975–90	224
References	225
Index	245