

Towards a normative theory of international relations

A critical analysis of the philosophical and methodological assumptions in the discipline with proposals towards a substantive normative theory

MERVYN FROST

*Senior Lecturer, Department of Political Studies
Rhodes University, Grahamstown*

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge

London New York New Rochelle

Melbourne Sydney

Contents

Acknowledgements	Page ix
Introduction	1
Notes	4
 PART ONE
 CHAPTER ONE
The positivist bias: a philosophical assumption which accounts for the dearth of normative theory in the discipline of international relations	9
1 Introduction	9
2 The positivist bias against normative theory in international relations	13
3 Positivism challenged	17
3.1 The Verstehen critique	17
3.2 Critical social science: the merging of social science, political practice and normative theory	26
3.3 Participant understanding, critical inquiry and moral argument: a possible dialogue	30
4 Conclusion	34
Notes	37

CHAPTER TWO

Sceptical and realist arguments against normative theory in international relations: a critical appraisal	42
1 Introduction	42
2 Non-cognitivism as the philosophical basis for scepticism about normative theory	46
2.1 Amoralism as a consequence of moral scepticism	46
2.2 The compatibility of non-cognitivist scepticism and serious moral argument	49
3 Realist arguments against normative theory in international relations	54
3.1 Realist arguments based on the primacy of the structure of world society	54
3.2 Realist arguments from the primacy of power	65
4 Morality and the imperatives of world politics	72
5 Conclusion and recapitulation	74
Notes	75

PART TWO

CHAPTER THREE

Normative issues in international relations: the domain of discourse and the method of argument	81
1 The normative issues in international relations and the central question for normative theory	82
2 The domain of discourse: modern state ordinary language and its alternatives	86
2.1 The conflict-of-ideologies objection	87
2.2 The natural law/community-of-mankind approach	92
2.3 The objection that issues arising in the modern state domain of discourse can only be settled from a wider moral point of view	97

3	A method for settling contested issues by argument: Dworkin and the example of hard cases in law	102
3.1	A general outline of Dworkin's method	102
3.2	Building coherent background justifications	109
4	Refutation of the critique of intra-practice argument	113
	Notes	116

CHAPTER FOUR

	Towards the construction of a normative theory of international relations	120
1	The settled body of norms in international relations	120
2	Justificatory background theories for the settled core of agreed norms: a critical appraisal	128
2.1	Justifications invoking order	128
2.2	Hedley Bull on order	131
2.3	The utilitarian justification	137
2.4	Rights based justifications	144
2.5	Contractarian rights based justifications	147
	Notes	157

CHAPTER FIVE

	Reconciling rights and sovereignty: the constitutive theory of individuality	161
1	Introduction	161
1.1	Constitutive theory as an alternative to the contractarian approach	162
2	Constitutive theory of individuality	166
2.1	Individuality and the family	168
2.2	Individuality and civil society	171
2.3	Individuality and the state	173
2.4	Individuality and the society of sovereign states	177
3	The constitutive theory of individuality as a background theory justifying the settled norms of the modern state domain of discourse	183
	Notes	184

viii Contents

CHAPTER SIX
The justification of unconventional violence in international relations: a hard case for normative theory	187
1 Unconventional violence as a normative problem in international relations	187
2 Terrorism as a hard case for normative theory	191
3 Constitutive theory applied to unconventional violence	196
3.1 A possible dialogue on justifiable sabotage	197
3.2 Application to two examples of sabotage strategies	203
3.3 A possible dialogue on unconventional violence against people	206
3.4 A possible dialogue about the use of indiscriminate terror	212
3.5 Uses of unconventional violence by the state	216
4 Conclusion	223
Notes	225
Conclusion	227
Bibliography	230
Index	237