

Literary Passports

The Making of Modernist Hebrew Fiction in Europe

Shachar M. Pinsker

STANFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

STANFORD, CALIFORNIA

Contents

List of Illustrations	ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Introduction	I
 Part I: The European Cities of Modernist Hebrew Fiction
1. Spatializing the Margins: Hebrew Modernism and the Urban Experience	29
2. Odessa and Warsaw: A Tale of Two Centers?	39
3. Homel and Lvov: The Significance of the Frontiers	54
4. London: A Foggy Day in Whitechapel	76
5. Vienna: “This Mocking and Innocent City”	87
6. Berlin: Between the Scheunenviertel and the Romanisches Café	105
 Part II: Sexuality and Gender in Modernist Hebrew Fiction
7. The Sexual Turn in Modernist Fiction of Fin de Siècle Europe	147
8. “I Am So Weak and My Desire Is So Strong”: The Crisis of (Jewish) Masculinity	165

9. In the House and in the Gardens: Erotic Triangulations and Homosocial Desire	185
10. Writing, Masculinity, and Sexual Desire	205
11. Imagining the Beloved: The New (Jewish) Woman	237
 Part III: Tradition, Modernity, and Religious Experience in Modernist Hebrew Fiction
12. Old Wine in New Flasks: The Reinvention of Jewish Traditions	275
13. In the Shadow of God: The Quest for New Religiosity in European and Hebrew Modernism	305
14. Mysterium Tremendum : The Varieties of Religious Experience in Hebrew Modernism	337
15. Out of the Depths: Visions and Guiding Spirits	360
 Epilogue	 391
 Appendix: The Meaning of Hasidism and Its Echoes in Modern Hebrew Literature (1906)
Yosef Chaim Brenner	403
Notes	407
Index	473