

A/499043

Irredentism in European Politics

Argumentation, Compromise and Norms

MARKUS KORNPÖBST

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of figures	page x
List of maps and tables	xi
Acknowledgements	xii
List of abbreviations	xv
Introduction	1
1 Irredentism in Europe	7
Defining irredentism	8
Why study irredentism?	10
Research puzzle	12
Overview of the literature	17
Existing explanations and the empirical record	19
Episteme, identity and norms	22
2 Argumentation and compromise	27
Building on the existing literature	28
Argumentation and persuasion	32
Argumentation and reasoning	35
Formation of advocacy: innovative argumentation	41
Power of argument I: persuasive argumentation	44
Power of argument II: compromise	45
Studying argumentation and compromise	48
Case selection	51
Sources	53
3 Broadening a vision for Europe	57
The idea of Europe	58
The longing for reunification	65
Key norms	70
A European identity	72
But Europe ends at the Elbe	77
Maintaining the borders of the Wertegemeinschaft	82
Adding an identity dimension: Wiedergutmachung	83

Imagining the possibility of a Schicksalsgemeinschaft beyond the Elbe	86
Towards a European peace order	91
Discussion of findings	94
4 Towards a new beginning	97
The taboo against recognition	98
Debating about reunification policies	101
New environment and innovative argumentation	103
Resonance in political parties	108
More advocates	112
Ostpolitik in transition	115
Persuasive argumentation	117
Compromise	123
Discussion of findings	131
5 From exclusion to inclusion	137
The Republic's colonial episteme	138
Exclusive nationalism – the national dimension	141
Exclusive nationalism – the international dimension	145
Longing for a united Ireland	148
More dissenting voices	152
Continuing dominance of the old	155
Old convictions under siege	158
The tide turns – the international dimension	162
Incomplete change – the national dimension	168
Inclusive nationalism	172
Discussion of findings	177
6 Constitutional change	179
Taboo against recognition	180
Debating diagnosis and cure of the Irish Question	186
New environment and half-hearted change	190
New environment and innovative argumentation	195
Persistent irredentism in the midst of the departure from the old	199
Persuasive argumentation	206
Compromise	210
Discussion of findings	214
Conclusion	219
Comparing the two cases	219
Added value I: why elaborating on argumentation?	221

Added value II: why be eclectic about logics of action?	224
Implications for the study of irredentism and conflict resolution	228
Implications for International Relations Theory	231
Appendix I: Coding procedures	235
Appendix II: Irredentist cases in Europe and other world regions	240
Appendix III: Analysed parliamentary debates and newspaper editions	249
Bibliography	255
Index	295