

The Single Euro Payments Area New Alliances Required to Tip the Market

Jürgen Bott
University of Applied Sciences of Kaiserslautern

C 260800

July 2009
ECRI Research Report No. 10

Contents

1. Introduction.....	1
2. European Commission: Better prices and services needed.....	2
2.1 Strong commitment of the European Commission and the European Central Bank	2
2.2 Expectations of policy-makers: Impressive gains.....	4
2.3 European banks' promise to create SEPA	5
3. New standards benefit the network industry	8
3.1 Established alliances in the European payment industry	9
3.1.1 Competition aspects of network industries	9
3.1.2 Technique to switch a network market	11
3.1.3 Payment services have 'cross-selling' potential for banks and non-banks	11
3.2 Realisation of economies of scale and scope	11
3.2.1 Theoretical expectations.....	12
3.2.2 Limitations on the synergy effects under SEPA	13
3.3 From new standards to new business models	15
3.3.1 International banks probably cannot tip the national markets.....	15
3.3.2 Dominant banks and their strong national focus	16
4. Commitment to the vision of SEPA.....	17
4.1 Operational strategy	17
4.1.1 Additional sources of revenues for service providers	18
4.1.2 The means of payments impact on the purchasing process.....	19
4.2 Technical and procedural readiness for SEPA.....	20
4.2.1 Modularity of payment sub-processes	21
4.2.2 Extended value chains with XML technology	21
4.3 Organisational behaviour	22
4.4 New alliances are necessary to create SEPA	22
5. Conclusions.....	24