

Thomas G. Masaryk's
Realism
Origins of a Czech Political Concept

by
Eva Schmidt-Hartmann

R. OLDENBOURG VERLAG MÜNCHEN 1984

CONTENTS

Foreword	7
Introduction	9
1. The Historical Background	12
2. The Emergence of Modern Austro-German Political Life	24
Common Sources of the Three Main Political Movements — Liberalism — Reformist Catholicism and the Christian Social Movement — Social Democratic Party — Radical Nationalists
3. The Emergence of Modern Czech Political Life	37
The National Party (The Old Czechs) — The National Liberal Party (The Young Czechs) — The Progressive Movement — The Agrarian Party — The National Socialist Party — The Czech Social Democrats
4. Developments Leading up to the Realist Movement	56
“Realism” in the Austro-German Intellectual Tradition — Josef Kaizl — Karel Kramář — Thomas Garrigue Masaryk — Athenaeum — Čas 1887—1889
5. The Formation of the Realist Group and its Development until 1893	95
Beginnings of the Kaizl-Kramář-Masaryk Cooperation — “Draft of the People’s Programme” — The Realists in the Reichsrat 1891—1893
6. The Development of Realism in Masaryk’s Thought between 1893—1900	117
“Česká otázka” — “Jan Hus” — “Naše nynější krise” — “Karel Havlíček” — Masaryk’s Concept of Realism
7. The Response of Masaryk’s Earlier Sympathisers to his Books	144
Josef Kaizl — Antonín Hajn — Josef Pekař
8. Realism and its Political Practice 1900—1914	162
The Foundation of the People’s Party (Realist) — Developments in the Realist Party — Masaryk’s Public Standing 1900—1914
9. Masaryk’s Elaboration of Realism up to 1914	176
Conclusion	189
Biographical Appendix	196
Bibliography	200